Gestalt Laws

Gestalt psychology is a movement in experimental psychology that began just prior to World War I.

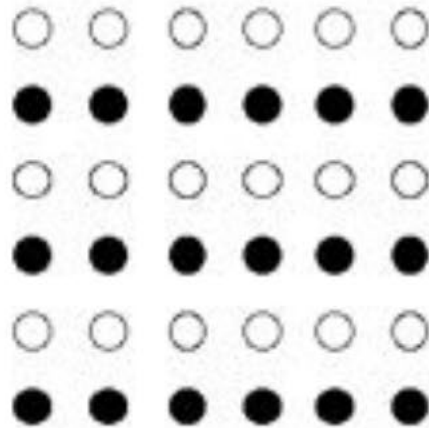

The Gestalt approach emphasizes that we perceive objects as well-organized patterns rather than separate component parts.

The focal point of Gestalt theory is the idea of "grouping," or how we tend to interpret a visual field or problem in a certain way.

Gestalt Laws

- Law of Similarity
- Law of Continuation
- Law of Closure
- Law of Symmetry
- Law of Proximity
- Law of Focal Point

1. Similarity

When things appear to be similar to each other, we group them together

2. Continuation

The tendency of the human eye to follow a continuous path be it lines, curves, or intersections until it encounters another path or intersection.

Example

Your eyes are unconsciously directed from A to Z. It shows that Amazon has every product, from A to Z.

Example

Etsy uses it to display its categories across the website, making it simpler for the user to find.

3. Closure

If there is a break in the object, we perceive the object as continuing in a smooth pattern.

Example

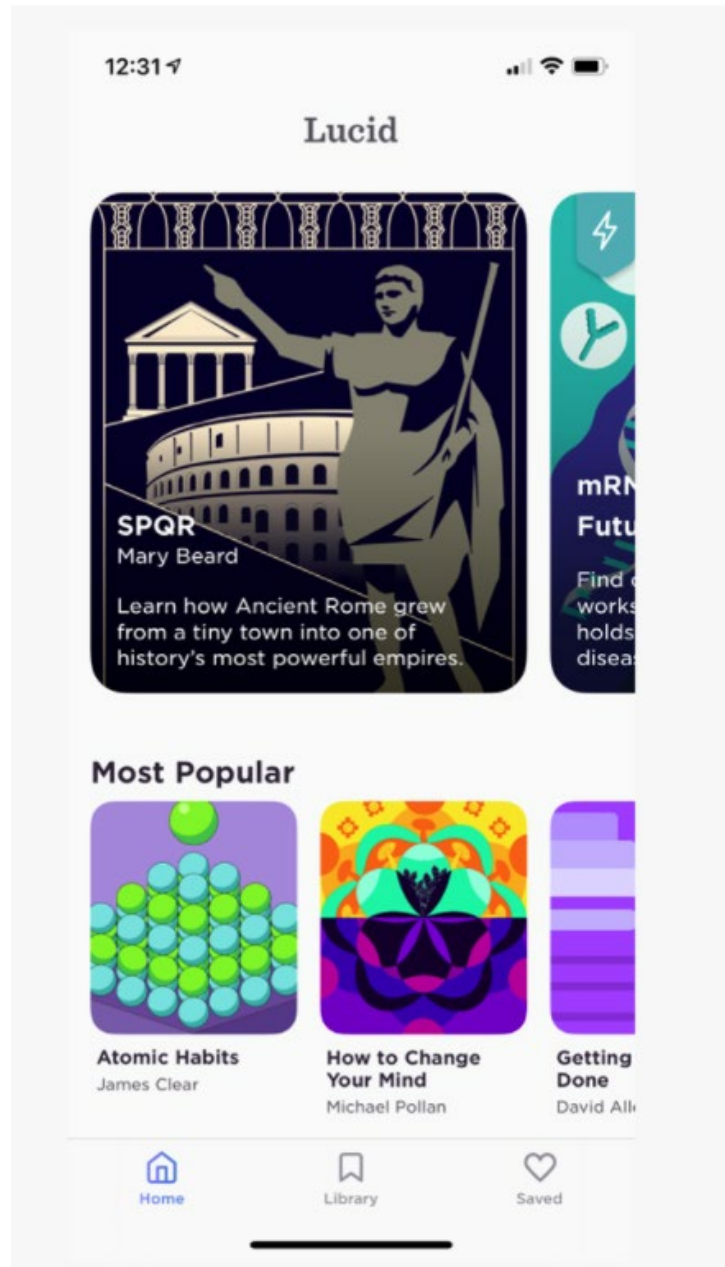

The logo for Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) applied the principle of closure to communicate 3 heads (2 in positive space and 1 in negative space).

Example

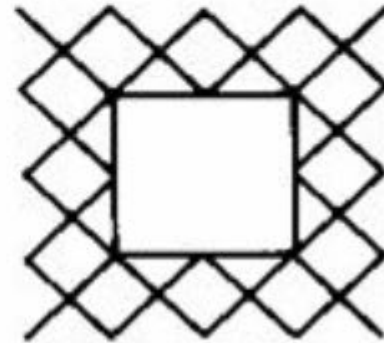

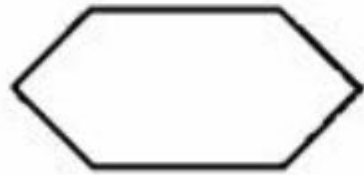

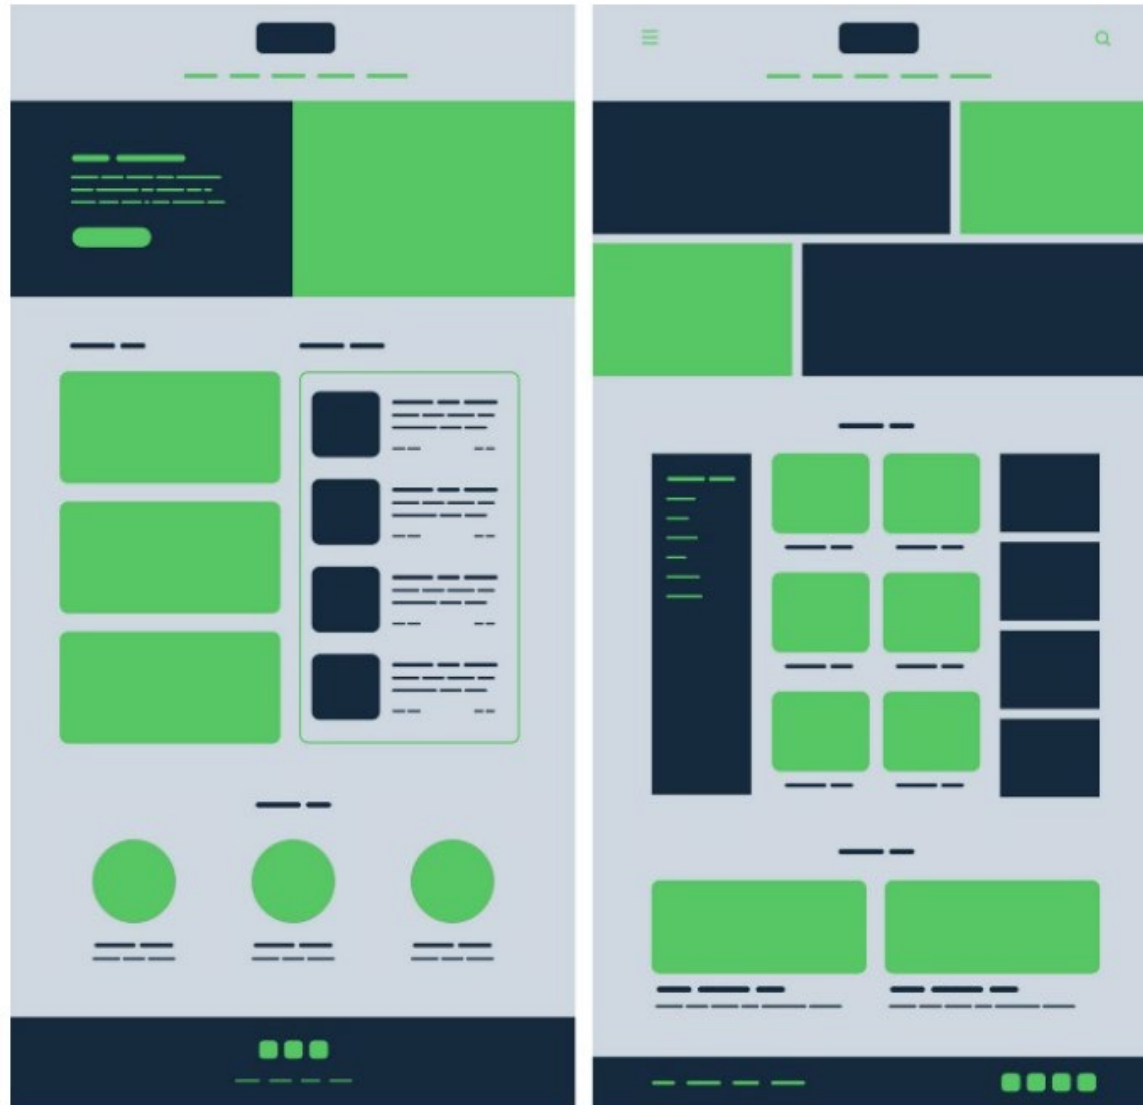

Major League Baseball applied the principle of closure to its logo design. The design suggests a baseball player prepared to swing at an approaching ball.

Lucid's segmented objects indicated that additional content existed beyond the vertical fold and invited users to discover it by swiping horizontally.

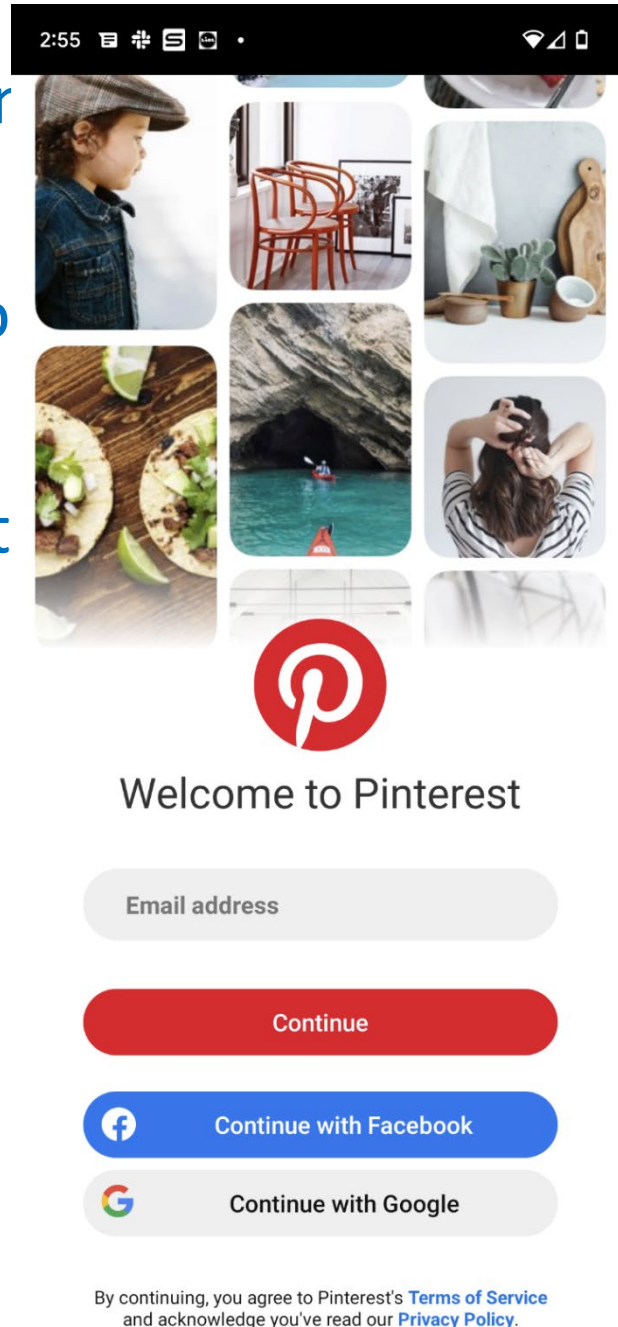

4. Symmetry

5. Proximity

The diagram illustrates the concept of Gestalt proximity by comparing two form layouts. Both layouts contain 12 form fields, each consisting of a gray label box and a white input field.

Left Layout (Single Group): All 12 form fields are presented in a single, continuous vertical column. The fields are grouped into three sets of four, but there are no visual cues (like brackets or spacing) to indicate these groupings, making the entire set of 12 fields appear as one large, daunting block.

Right Layout (Three Groupings): The same 12 form fields are presented in three distinct, vertically separated groupings. Each grouping consists of four fields. The fields within each grouping are closely spaced, while there is a significant vertical gap between the three groupings. This visual separation makes the form appear less daunting by breaking it into three manageable sections.

12 form fields in one large group (left) appear more daunting than the same number of fields broken out into three groupings (right).
